Excerpt: . . . shows that you have completely renounced your Christianity! For God has ordered not to resist evil, but you renounce the final pardon which is granted to the ignorant; therefore it is not even proper that any mass shall be sung after you. In our patrimony, in the country of Lifland, you name the city of Volmir as belonging to our enemy, King Sigismund: by this you only complete the treachery of a vicious dog! . . . Written in our great Russia, in the famous, royal, capital city of Moscow, on the steps of our imperial threshold, in the year from the creation of the world 7072, the fifth day of July. The Domostroy. (XVI. century.) The Domostroy, i. e. , House-government, is an important document of the sixteenth century, as it throws a light on the inner life of the Russians in the time of Ivan the Terrible. Its authorship is ascribed in the extant manuscripts to Sylvester, the adviser of Ivan the Terrible, but it is assumed that he was only the last compiler of various . codes of conduct that were known in Russia before his day. At least, the whole production bears the stamp of being a composite work. Two distinct groups are discerned in it: the first has continual references to the Tsar and the honours due him; the other deals with a society whose chief interest is purely commercial, and appeals to the judgment of the people,...
