Not illustrated. 1921 Excerpt: . . . it had practically drowned itself on its first long run, and had since then been flopping about on the surface of the water. I also saw that Miss C. s reel had blocked, so that the line would not run out, and that she had but fifty feet of line left. She was holding on to the rod for dear life but looked very pale. I told the boatman to back the boat slowly toward the flopping fish, and was pleased to find that the reel would take the line. We soon had the tuna gaffed and in the boat--118 pounds. Miss C. collapsed at once; her hat was off, her hair was streaming down her back, and she was utterly exhausted, so we hastened back to Avalon with the Tuna Club flag proudly flying at the mast. There was consternation at the Tuna Club that evening. We supposed that anyone was eligible to membership in the Club who had killed a tuna of one hundred pounds unaided; but the women did not have the vote in California then and no provision had been made for lady members, for it had not been supposed that a lady could possibly take a tuna. Miss C, sad to relate, was refused membership but was awarded the muchprized tuna button, which no doubt is still her most valued possession. I often think of that days fishing with pleasure as it was a day full of new sensations and many...
